Ibn Abd al-Wahhab and his economic ideas

Islahi, Abdul Azim

Islamic Economics Research Center, KAAU, Jeddah, KSA

10 May 2008

Online at https://mpra.ub.uni-muenchen.de/31034/
MPRA Paper No. 31034, posted 21 May 2011 13:41 UTC
In an attempt to investigate Muslim economic thinking in the 12th century Hijrah, corresponding 18th century AD, the present paper explores economic ideas of one of the greatest Muslim personalities of the period, Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab (1115-1206/1703-1792), who is commonly known as revivalist and renovator of religious beliefs and practices. The paper discovers that he had deep insights in financial matters who managed the public finance of the first Saudi State. At the outset, to provide a background knowledge of the personality of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab, the paper sheds light on time and environment in which he lived, his life and work, and his impact. The paper is an initiative that aims to fillip research into unexplored areas. There is need to carry out thorough research into economic ideas of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab and his contemporaries.

Time and Environment

Muhammad Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhab was born in the centre of the Najd at al-Uyaynah, an oasis which at that time was enjoying some prosperity. It was the time when the Islamic World had reached its extreme decline, degradation and utter fall. The atmosphere was very gloomy and darkness had covered all its regions. Moral degradation and corruption was rampant everywhere. Especially the condition of the Arabian Peninsula was highly terrible. Ibn Bishr presents the sad picture of Arabian Peninsula. There was no law and order, economy was spoiled, opium and wine were common and religiosity deplorable. Pagan innovations and superstitions cropped up and spread their tentacles every where. The people went back to their old practices of idolatry. They started paying homage to shrines and graves, so much so that they even directed their devotional prayers and supplications towards the graves to the exclusion of Allah. They gave precedence to the philosophical views and taqlid (blind following) over the Sunnah. According to Natana DeLong-Bas, ‘one of the major signs of the deterioration of Islam was the adoption of rituals and beliefs from other religions, like praying to saints and believing that saints could grant blessings or perform miracles. In some cases, people had adopted superstitious practices, like spitting in a particular way or wearing charms to ward off evil spirits’. Thus, pure and austere monotheism (tawhid) had become corrupted with the growing superstition and mysticism. The mosques stood empty, unfrequented and even deserted. The ignorant multitude decorated amulet, charms and rosaries listened to and blindly followed foul saints and ecstatic dervishes.

---

1 Dr Islahi is Professor of Economics, at the Islamic Economics Research Center, King Abdulaziz University, Jeddah.
In the early 18th century the Najd region was infested with corrupt beliefs and religious practices repugnant to the fundamentals of the True Religion. For example: In Jubailah, people visited the grave of Zayd b. al-Khattab and sought relief for their needs. In Manfuhah, people sought mediation through a male palm-tree believing that a spinster, who pays a visit to it, soon gets married. In Dir`iyah there was a cave which people frequented. The same story was prevalent in other parts of Arabia. These conditions were demanding for a reformer and renovator.

Life and Works

Early life and education. Shaykh Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Wahhab b. Sulayman al-Tamimi belonged to a family which had produced several scholars of Hanbali school of jurisprudence. His grand father, Sulayman b. Muhammad had been mufti of the Najd. His father Abd al-Wahhab (d. 1153/1740) was qadi at Uyaynah. Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s education began under his learned father’s guidance. He studied the Hanbali jurisprudence, tafsir and hadith from him. He performed hajj in 1128/1715 and stayed there about four years to return in 1132/1719. At that time Shaykh Abdullah bin Ibrahim b. Saif al-Najdi was chief of the scholars of Madinah. Shaykh Muhammad acquired a good deal of knowledge from him. Al-Najdi introduced him to another great scholar of Madinah Muhammad Hayat al-Sindi (d. 1165/1751).

Their strong stand on tawhid (unicity of Allah) and their deep concern over false beliefs and evil deeds created a strong bond between Ibn Abd al-Wahhab and his teachers. During this time he came to know and benefited from the knowledge of other scholars such as Ali Afendi Daghistani, Isma’il al-`Ajluni and others. Then he moved on to Najd and Basrah. He wanted to travel to Syria for the purpose of acquiring further knowledge but due to lack of resources, he had to give up the idea. He stayed for a long time in Basrah, where he pursued his studies under a number of renowned scholars, among whom Shaykh Muhammad al-Majmu’i was most prominent.

Reformative endeavors. During his stay in Basrah, he authored his most famous work Kitab al-Tawhid (Essays on the Unicity of Allah or The Book of Monotheism). The supporters of falsehood defamed, tortured and turned him out of Basrah. They also persecuted his teacher Shaykh al-Majmu’i. After leaving Basrah he came to the town al-Zubayr, then to al-Ahsa, and then finally to Huraymila. In all these places he faced much suffering at the hands of the wicked persons who did not like his enjoining the good and forbidding the evil. So he decided to move to Uyaynah, which was then governed by Uthman Ibn Muhammad b. Muammar. Uthman welcomed Ibn Abd al-Wahhab with hospitality and promised him all support and help in calling people to the true and pure Islam.

Ibn Abd al-Wahhab urged the people to return to the worship of Allah only and a strict adherence to the Sunnah of the Prophet. Ibn Abd al-Wahhab managed to cut down trees that were being worshipped in the area. He succeeded with the help of Uthman, in bringing down the dome over the grave of Zayd b. al-Khattab. He also carried out the prescribed punishment for adultery on a woman who had confessed to it.
Use of Economic weapon against Ibn Abd al-Wahhab. Sulayman b. Muhammad of the Shi'ite tribe Banu Khalid, the chief of al-Ahsa and Qatif, became afraid of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s growing influence and number of supporters. He used the economic weapon to put an end to Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s reformation endeavors.

Uthman b. Muhammad b. Mu`ammar, the ruler of Uyaynah in whose region Ibn Abd al-Wahhab was carrying on his reforms, had many economic connections with the ruler of Al-Ahsa such as:

- He used to draw an annual stipend from the treasury of Al-Ahsa
- He enjoyed trading priority in the port of Al-Ahsa
- He enjoyed exemption from taxes on his agriculture estates in Al-Ahsa, and
- His traders of Uyaynah used to receive many concessions in Al-Ahsa

Using his influence Sulayman, the chief of Al-Ahsa and Qatif, pressurized the amir of Uyaynah, Uthman b. Mu`ammar to kill Ibn Abd al-Wahhab or hand him over to him. Otherwise he would stop all concessions, and attack him. However, Uthman who could not refuse his demand advised Ibn Abd al-Wahhab to leave Uyaynah secretly. Thus, he left for Dir`iyah.⁹

In al-Dir`iyah. Ibn Abd al-Wahhab left the town on foot escorted by a horseman through the desert in the scorching sun, with only the thought of Allah, until he reached Dir`iyah as the guest of Abd al-Rahman b. Suwaylim, who introduced him to most of the prominent people of Dir`iyah. They visited him in secret and he explained to them the real meaning and the significance of tawhid. Mashari and Thunayan, two brothers of Amir Muhammad b. Saud (d. 1177/1765), the chief of al-Dir`iyah, became supporters of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab. They convinced their brother Muhammad to see Ibn Abd al-Wahhab and listen to his call. It is reported that the wife of Muhammad b. Sa`ud, who was a pious and wise lady, played important role in persuasion of her husband to welcome Ibn Abd al-Wahhab.¹⁰

Prince Muhammad accepted the suggestion and met Ibn Abd al-Wahhab. He invited the amir to tawhid saying that it was the message, with which all the Messengers were sent by Allah. He also drew the attention of the Prince to the polytheistic practices and notions prevalent among the people of the Najd. He wished that the Prince should assume leadership of the Muslims. The prince acceded to the wish of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab and offered him all help and assistance to carry out his task.

However, amir Muhammad b. Saud put two conditions to Ibn Abd al-Wahhab:

1. When his movements would spread, he should not leave him.
2. He collected taxes on fruits from his territory that he should not oppose.

Ibn Abd al-Wahhab said: “As for the first condition is concerned, I vow, my blood will be with yours; my destruction will be with your destruction. As for the second condition is concerned, I hope the Almighty Allah will bestow upon you conquest and compensate you with spoils of war, and zakah which will be much better than what you are exacting from them”.¹¹ Amir Muhammad convincingly accepted Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s assurance.
The allegiance that took place in the year 1157/1744 between the two Muhammads – Shaykh Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab and amir Muhammad b. Saud proved turning point in the history of Arabian peninsula. They complemented and strengthened each other. According to Lothrop Stoddard, ‘Saud always considered himself responsible to public opinion and never encroached upon the legitimate freedom of his subjects. His government though stern, was able and just. The Wahhabi judges were competent and honest. Robbery became almost unknown, so well was the public peace maintained’.

Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s movement passed through four stages – first in Basrah, second in al-Ahsa and third in Huraymila, and fourth in al-Dir’iyah. Before he passed away in 1206/1792, he saw the success of his movement and its spread in major parts of the peninsula.

In the opinion of al-Faruqi, in the movement of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab, ‘what was indeed extraordinary was the coincidence of the `alim and the prince’. ‘The movement was hatched and grew to full maturity before Napoleon landed in Egypt, Dir’iyah became the greatest capital of Islamic modernism without undergoing any modernist influence’.

At the time when Ibn Abd al-Wahhab migrated to Dir’iyah, the number of houses there did not cross seventy. Their economy was simple and subsistence level. Trading was very scarce and for necessities of life only. After his arrival, the number of inhabitants increased and so the economic activities. Extensive farming, reclamation of land, and plantation were seen everywhere. Commercial activities also expanded. With the establishment of peace and security domestic trade received a boost. Literacy enhanced.

His Campaign of Renovation and Purification. Ibn Abd al-Wahhab never claimed the rank of mujtahid. The oneness of God (Tawhid) was the basic point of call for return to original Islam (Salafiyah). Ibn Abd al-Wahhab felt that ‘the devotional spirit of the Muslim masses, as well as their religious consciousness, had been infiltrated with Sufi views and practices compromising tawhid. A reversal of the tide of history, …. would not be possible without reform of popular Muslim religiosity’. Shaykh Ibn `Abd al-Wahhab focused on tawhid and fought innovations and deviations in religion, which prevailed in Arabia. He considered his movement an effort to purify Islam by returning Muslims to the original principles of Islam, the Qur’an and the Sunnah, and rejecting all un-Islamic beliefs and practices. Natana DeLong-Bas observes: ‘the major distinctive doctrine of Islam is belief in absolute monotheism (tawhid). … It was for this reason that the revival and reform movements of the eighteenth century adamantly insisted that a "return" to monotheism was the necessary first step in reforming Islam. This meant getting rid of foreign and superstitious beliefs and practices. Wahhabism shared this common concern and goal, becoming famous for its strict adherence to absolute monotheism (tawhid)’.

Ibn Abd al-Wahhab was right in diagnosis of the basic evil of his society and the cure. It was through the faith in tawhid that the Prophet Muhammad, be peace upon him, used to rectify pre-Islamic ignorance (jahiliyah), and now his follower Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab also used the same to correct the corrupt society of his time. His fight against the other evils has already been noted above.
Opposition: Ibn Abd al-Wahhab did not face opposition from commoners and ignorant people only. Certain so-called scholars also tried to malign his reform through their works. 'Abd al-Wahhab ibn Ahmad Barakat al-Shafi'i al-Azhari al-Tantawi from Egypt, Zayni Dahlan from Makkah, 'Ali al-Shafi'i al-Basri al-Qabbani from Iraq authored books in refutation of ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s reforms. Their opposition was based on ignorance, rivalry, and suspicions. A major factor was misunderstanding created by defaming forces motivated by political objectives. Even his brother Sulaiman and his father, 'Abd al-Wahhab, had initially repudiated him for his ideas. Eventually a good majority of his people accepted his views. His father and brother Sulaiman too were convinced after prolonged discussions.

Works. Kitab al-Tawhid is the most important work of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab. It is, no doubt, ‘the ideational spearhead’ of his mighty movement. This movement spread within a century like wildfire throughout the Muslim World.

There is no doubt that tawhid is the most basic and key concept in Islam. According to Siddiqi, ‘It sums up the Islamic way of life and presents, in a nutshell, the essence of the Islamic civilization.’ He rightly considers ‘a lapse from tawhid’ the main cause behind the Muslims’ decline – ‘their loss of political power, of their economic backwardness, intellectual stagnation, and social degeneration’.

Since Kitab al-Tawhid ‘was meant to be an instrument for reform, the author was more concerned to expose the misunderstanding and misapplications of the principle than to project its desirable consequences’. He gave the book the appearance of a student’s notes rather than a systematically laid-out treatise…. ‘Every chapter in this book opens a vista of breathtaking vision’.

Some of his other works are as follows:
- Adab al-Mashy Ila al-Salah (Manners of Walking to the Prayer)
- Usul al-Iman (Foundations of Faith)
- Fada’i’l Islam (Excellent Virtues of Islam)
- Fada’i’l Qur’an (Excellent Virtues of the Qur’an)
- Kitab Kashf al-Shubhah (The Book of Clarification of Uncertainties)
- Majmu’at al-Hadith ‘Ala Abwab al-Fiqh (Compendium of the Hadith on the Main Topics of the Fiqh).

For the benefits of students and those who could not read voluminous works, Ibn Abd al-Wahhab prepared abridged edition of many significant works of earlier writers. For example:
- Mukhtasar al-Iman (Abridgement of Ibn Taymiya’s Kitab al-Iman (the Faith)
- Mukhtasar al-Insaf wa’l-Sharh al-Kabir (Abridgement of the two works, al-Insaf and al-Sharh al-Kabir)
- Mukhtasar Sirat al-Rasul (Summarized Biography of the Prophet)
- Mukhtasar al-Sawa’iq (Literally Summary of the Lightning bolt, it is a summary of a criticism of Shi’as written in Palestine by Ibn Hajar al-‘Asqalani).
- Mukhtasar Fath al-Bari (Fath al-Bari is a commentary on the Sahih al-Bukhari by Ibn Hajar al-‘Asqalani).
His impact

Refuting the charges that the movement of Shaykh Muhammad b. Abd al Wahhab, was retrograde or conservative Abdul Hamid Siddiqi says: ‘It is progressive in the sense that it not only awakened the Arabs to the most urgent need of heart-searching and broke the complacency to which they had been accustomed for years, but also gave the reform a definite line of action’. 24 ‘The Shaykh made an elaborate programme of fostering education amongst the masses and teachers who could both teach and preach….’ 25 … ‘The puritan beginnings of Islamic revival were combined with an elaborate programme of mass education and a recreation against taqlid (blind following) broadened along more conservative lines’.

In spite of the ignoble and false propaganda mounted by his adversaries against the reformatory movement of Shaykh Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab and the derogatory use of the word ‘Wahhabi’ for the movement and its followers, his impact on the modern development of Muslim mind has been profound. This has been admitted by a number of 20th century intellectuals. Henri Laoust observes “Although Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab’s doctrine was condemned or rejected by an important section of Muslim opinion, it was nevertheless to make a powerful contribution not only to a more profound Islamization of Arabia, but also to a general renewal of the Islamic conscience immediately before the modern period of intrusion from the West”. 26 Taha Husayn (d. 1973) says that the movement of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab has influenced not only the Arabian Peninsula, but also its relation with European nations. 27 To him, his movement was new and old at the same time. It was new as compared to his time but it was the same old call which was given by the Prophet Muhammad (p.b.u.h). It had great impact on literary and intellectual life of Arabs. 28

Stressing upon the influence of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab on modern generation, our contemporary scholar DeLong-Bas remarks: “Many of the themes he discussed in his writings are hallmarks of the 18th century Islamic thought. These include his emphasis on a return to the Qur'an and hadith, the eradication of erroneous popular religious practices, like tomb and saint veneration, rejection of taqlid (blind following) in favor of ijtihad (independent reasoning), authentication of hadith (prophetic traditions) on the basis of their content, rather than their asnad (chains of transmission), focus on the intent behind actions, rather than ritual perfection”. 29 She further says: "It would be more appropriate to look at early 20th century reformist movements, particularly the Salafiyya movement in Egypt led by Muhammad Abduh and Rashid Rida, for Sheikh Muhammad's intellectual influence. Sheikh Muhammad's legal thought is also apparent in many contemporary legal reforms, ironically those pertaining to women gender."

Several of the sons and students of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab carried on his mission. His four sons, Husayn, Ali, Abd-Allah and Ibrahim were great scholars and authors who continued his mission after him. 30 His movement resulted into development of human resources for the young Saudi state. For example: Some of the students who benefited from his knowledge and rose to the position of Qadis and Muftis are as follows:

Some of the authors think that eighteenth century reformative movements led by Shah Wali-Allah al-Dihlawi in India and Shehu Uthman Dan Fodio in the West Africa were influenced by the Movement of Shaykh Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab. But this is not correct. When al-Dihlawi visited Hijaz in the year 1143 AH, Ibn Abd al-Wahhab was engaged in Basrah. His movement had not yet stabilized even in the areas of al-Najd. Uthman dan Fodio’s visit of Arabia is not reported in the sources dealing with his life and work. However, he was trained by some teachers who had been in the Holy places of Islam. But they were too old to be aware of and affected by the movement of Shaykh Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab. In fact, all these reformers were influenced by the same original sources, the Qur’an and the Sunnah and the intellectual and religious network of Madinah, the city of the Prophet.

Economic Ideas

Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab was fully aware of the importance of economic factor in man’s life. It was due to the lack of economic support that he had to drop his plan of pursuing education in Syria. He also realized that it was economic dependence of Ibn Mu`ammar upon al-Khalidi that the former was forced to expel Ibn Abd al-Wahhab from Huraymila. Again, it was necessity of economic means for performing ones religious and social obligations that he paid attention to revival and reclamation of lands and development of agriculture and trade after reaching Dir`iyah. Paying homage to Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s efforts to promote the economy of his people, Fazlur-Rahman says: ‘The Wahhabis, however, have done good work by bringing into relief the principles of Islamic egalitarianism and co-operation, and actually founded cooperative farm villages’.

It is reported that some of his followers used to work in night to attend his lectures in the day. Most probably this might have been on his advice and he would not like idleness. As the job opportunities were not enough in Dar`iyah, he used to help his poor followers financially, those who could not get a job or were unable to work, through borrowing from others. He repaid such loans from the booty obtained from the conquest of Riyadh. This shows that he favours the idea of unemployment allowance provided that it is not voluntary.

Ibn Abd al-Wahhab was a man of action and conviction. He called people to return to the Qur’an and the Sunnah. These two sources contain a number of economic principles and teachings. They were sufficient to solve the simple problems facing the economy of the Najd region, the center of his reformative endeavors. Thus, he did not need to deal with economic ideas in his works. By his action he practically showed how to solve economic problems of his society. When Ibn Saud asked him at the time of bay‘ah, not to object and oppose the taxes he would collect from the fruit products of his territory, Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s answer was: “I hope the Almighty Allah will bestow upon you conquest and compensate you through war booty, and zakah which will be much better than what you exact from them.”37 Clearly, this shows that like Ibn Taymiyah38 he believed that if non-Shar‘iah taxes are cancelled, the Shar‘iah taxes will be enough to take care of the genuine public expenditure of the state provided they are properly managed. By his administration of public revenue he practically proved and showed how Shari’ah-sanctioned sources could take care of the need of the government and people.

The historian Ibn Bishr states: ‘the fifth parts (booty), zakah and whatever minor or major items were brought to al-Dar‘iyah, they were handed over to Ibn Abd al-Wahhab who disposed them as he saw them fit. No one, even amir Abd al-Aziz (d. 1215/1801), took anything without his permission. But after Riyadh was conquered, Ibn Abd al-Wahhab handed over all these matters to Abd al-Aziz’.39 Through a report of Ibn Ghannam, al-Uthaymin infers that the administration of public finance was entrusted to Ibn Abd al-Wahhab up to the end of his life. Thus, he might be rightly called the first finance administrator of the first Saudi state.40 It is not known what the budget of the government at that time was. Data of some later years show that the annual collections of zakah in the first Saudi Government were 2250,000 Riyals. The following table shows the estimated annual zakah revenue generally collected from various regions in the early years of the First Saudi rule:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Regions</th>
<th>Amount in riyals</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>the Najd</td>
<td>400,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>People living in the direction of Syria, Yemen, Tihamah, and Oman</td>
<td>500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Ahsa</td>
<td>400,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qatif</td>
<td>200,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bahrain</td>
<td>400,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bedouins of Hijaz and surrounding areas</td>
<td>200,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the cities of Oman</td>
<td>150,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>2,250,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: Compiled on the basis of information provided by al-Riki41

In addition, Saud family had some other sources of income which were not regular, such as gifts from kings, spoils of war and their own properties in the Najd. From al-Ahsa such incomes reached to an annual amount of 300,000 Riyals. Since a number of wars were fought and won, spoil of war was also an important source of government income. For example, from Ras al-Khimah the amount collected from booty excluding gifts was 120,000 Riyals. Gifts presented to government officials were deposited in the bayt al-mal.42

It seems that Ibn Abd al-Wahhab did not permit any tax except zakah which he collected from both hidden and open assets. The historian al-Riki writes: "He (Ibn Abd al-Wahhab) made it obligatory for people to pay zakah from their non-apparent assets that can easily be hidden away by the owner such as money and merchandise to imam, that is, the ruler of Muslims, and he will distribute it among its beneficiaries."

Perhaps Ibn Abd al-Wahhab did not mention this in his books. It is possible that al-Riki has come to know this from the practice of Muhammad b. Abd al-Wahhab and the history of the period or some other reports. It may be noted that what Ibn Abd al-Wahhab did was the original practice of early rightly guided caliphs. When wealth and prosperity increased it was third Caliph Uthman b. Affan who allowed the zakah payers to disburse the zakah of non-apparent assets themselves. Ibn Abd al-Wahhab's action in this regard is one more example of his endeavor to return to the original practices of Islam.

Out of various economic institutions of Islam, Ibn Abd al-Wahhab especially paid attention to waqf, as it was misused by some people, so he felt it necessary to present the correct Islamic position regarding the waqf. He notes three stands on waqf creation: A waqf created for poor and down trodden with good intention to win the pleasure of Allah in which his inheritors are not included. This kind of waqf is valid according to majority of jurists but Qadi Shurayh and scholars from Kufah reject it which is the second stand. A third stand is to create waqf at the cost of inheritors, apparently for the pleasure of Allah but intentionally to dispose the property arbitrarily, depriving some of inheritors and benefiting more to some others. Although some muftis consider it valid, in his opinion it is a corrupt practice, and an interference in the inheritance system provided in the Qur'an. He supports his stand with the primary sources of Islam – the Qur'an and Sunnah – that shows his vast knowledge of these sources and power to infer rules.

Dallal is correct when he says that ‘Ibn Abd al-Wahhab even distinguishes between what may be termed as injustice because of social and economic inequities and creedal injustice (zulum al-amwal and zulm al-shirk)’. But he is not correct when he says that ‘Wahhabi thought is focused on the second kind, whereas the first is tolerable as long as it is accompanied by tawhid’. We have already seen how Ibn Abd al-Wahhab forbade amir Muhammad Ibn Saud to collect non-Shar’iah taxes which the former considered as zulm al-amwal.

As an administrator of public finance Ibn Abd al-Wahhab had to manage the public expenditure as well. In addition to expenditure on maintenance of armed forces, and stipend for deserving people, he must have included the development of the economy as a whole, because this was inevitable in that particular situation. However, sources are silent about the details of his scheme of expenditure. Most probably he had adopted the policy of spending on various heads according to their importance in the existing circumstances.

Concept like public interest has great implications in economic decision making. Ibn Abd al-Wahhab has used it extensively. While analyzing his methodology for interpreting Islamic law, Natana DeLong-Bas highlighted his attention to concepts like maslahah (public interest) in order to interpret law for the benefit of society. She remarks: “He gives great attention to the issues of social justice and social welfare". She has devoted two chapters of her thesis to the most controversial issues of his writings for Westerners - his treatment of women and gender and an analysis of his treatise on jihad.
Ibn Abd al-Wahhab also paid attention to the empowerment of woman. To quote DeLong-Bas again: "One of the most remarkable aspects of his writings is his consistent respect for and protection of women. The most important themes of Shaykh Muhammad's writings with respect to women were those upholding their rights, providing justice for them, and insisting upon a balance of rights and responsibilities between men and women". This is an important proof from a lady on Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s recognition of women’s role and right in the society and the economy.

From the foregoing it is clear that to him, the economic teaching and principles found in the Qur’an and Sunnah and the Islamic heritage were enough to deal with the economic problems faced by his simple society. Economics being a behavioral science, Ibn Abd al-Wahhab paid attention to application of economics rather than theorization of it. His reformative efforts blocked the foreign economic and cultural influence on Arabia. Stating the effect of Ibn Abd al-Wahhab’s movement on Christian world Zwemer (1901, p. 326), the zealous missionary and preacher of Christianity, remarks: “The most unfavourable result has been in Arabia itself, by practically building a wall of fanaticism around the old Wahhabi state and postponing the opening of doors to commerce and Christianity in that part of peninsula”.

The present study is a first attempt to explore economic thinking of this great revolutionary scholar of 12th/18th century. In spite of our numerous findings, it is still an initiative. Therefore, there is need to carry out more comprehensive research in his economic ideas.

Endnotes

1. First Saudi State was founded in 1744 and continued till 1818. In this period following four imams headed the government:
   1- Imam Muhammad Ibn Saud (1744-1765)
   2- Abdul-Aziz b. Muhammad Ibn Saud (176-1803)
   3- Saud b. Abdul-Aziz Muhammad Ibn Saud (1803-1814), and

5. Ibn Bishr, pp. 22-23.

6. Ibid. p. 21.

7. Ibid. p. 22.

8. Ibid. pp. 22-23.

9. Ibid. p. 23.

10. Ibid. p.24
11. Ibid, p.25
12. The term "Wahhabi" is an outsider's designation for the religious reformist movement within Islam founded by Muhammad Ibn Abd al-Wahhab (1709-1792). This term is given to them by their opponents and is now used by both European scholars and most Arabs. Members of the movement describe themselves as muwahhidun, the term is an Arabic word which means 'Unitarians'. The movement calls for renewal of Muslim spirit, the return to the original sources of Islam, namely the Qur'an and the authentic teachings of Prophet Muhammad (peace and blessings of Allah be upon him), and the refutation of all pagan innovations in the religion.
17. Ibid, p. 70.
18. Ibid, p.79.
19. al-Faruqi, p. xvi.
23. al-Faruqi, p. xix.
31. Only Zwemer reports with reference to Arnold that Uthman Dan Fodio made 'a pilgrimage to Makka at the time of Wahabi occupation', 'converted to their views and returned to Sudan to inaugurate reform'. The story seems to be based on speculation. (The Wahabis: their Origin, History, Tenets and Influence, op. cit., p 325).
33. Ibid, p. 23.
34. Uqayli, p. 70.
36. Ibn Bishr, pp. 22-25
37. Uqayli, p. 67-68
38. Ibn Taymiyah, in his work Iqtida’ al-Sirat al-Mustaqim (Makkah, al-Majd al-Tijaiyah, n.d., p. 281), remarks: “Had the authority collected what was just and put it to its proper use, they would never have needed to impose illegal taxes and duties”.
39. Ibn Bishr, p. 27.
42. Ibid, p. 272.
43. On this al-Uthaymin raised an objection that the author did not mention where Ibn Abd al-Wahhab had said that the zakah of merchandise should be paid to the ruler (al-Riki, p. 308n). It may be noted that almost all schools of fiqh hold that it is on the discretion of the ruler to assume collection responsibility of zakah of such assets and distribute it, or leave it to the owners to disburse it themselves among its beneficiaries. However, they differed on the question whether it is obligatory for imam to do so and to enforce people to pay him and punish those who deny it. For details one may refer to al-Qaradawi, Yusuf, Fiqh al-Zakah Maktabah Wahhab Abidin, 1986, 2: 765-781.
44. al-Kasani says: “The Prophet (peace be upon him), Abu Bakr and Umar used to collect it (zakah of non-apparent assets) till the period of Uthman. When wealth increased in his time, he thought it appropriate to entrust it to the owner which was done in the wake of the consensus of the Companions (May Allah bless all of them). (Bada‘i` al-Sana‘i’, Cairo, 1327 AH, 217).
45. Said, Amin, pp. 96-104.